Brief Explanation:

An examination of various uses of school names has revealed that some schools have school names in the public domain which are inconsistent and sometimes hard to identify; moreover, the names differ from official names approved by the Board of Education.

In light of these inconsistencies, the Standards, Assessment, and Accountability Division has taken on the task of establishing standardized, consistent school names for all district schools. Four types of school names have been developed and will be implemented:

- An “official,” unlimited-length name for uses such as printing school names on high school diplomas;
- A 30-character name to meet PeopleSoft and Zangle constraints;
- A 10-character name to meet PeopleSoft and Zangle constraints; and
- A California Department of Education (CDE) school name, which will also be used for National Center for Educational Statistics (NCES) Common Core of Data school names, College Board school names used for AP, ACT, and SAT testing and for UC and CSU applications, and WASC accreditation school names. Although CDE takes up to 50-character names, CDE itself frequently truncates the names. Thus, a 30-character name has been adopted.

Several naming conventions were applied. All names are upper and lower case. All names except unlimited-length names avoid the use of “School” or “Academy” or “Charter” except if it is impractical to do so (e.g., “Charter School of San Diego,” “Language Academy”).

Thirty-character names were limited to the last name of persons after whom the schools were named. With the exception of names shared by schools of more than one school type (e.g., “Pacific Beach,” “La Jolla,” “Marshall”), 30-character names do not include school types. Abbreviations are used when length does not permit longer names or when abbreviation is the common usage. Small high schools were given names which start with the name of the complex which is their home (e.g., “San Diego CIMA”). Characters such as ampersands and hyphens were specifically excluded from names if at all possible.

Ten-character names required more leeway. When necessary, spaces were deleted; a greater degree of abbreviation was employed. Here, too, distinctions were made—via a single letter—to indicate school type for schools with otherwise identical names (e.g., “Pac Bch E” and “Pac Bch M,” “La Jolla E” and “La Jolla H”).

CDE names are generally similar to the 30-character names except that they include the type of school in the name (e.g., McKinley Elementary, Taft Middle, Morse High) where the type is part of the unlimited-length name.

Early in 2006, these names will be implemented in PeopleSoft, SIS, Zangle, and Encore and CDE school name changes will be submitted to CDE.

Please review your school’s names by December 9, 2005. The attached lists display proposed names for each district school, including charter and pilot schools. Schools are listed in alphabetical order. Of course, many proposed names are identical to those currently used. Some have been changed to create more consistent usage. Please contact Tim Betteridge at (619) 725-7128 or tbetteridge@sandi.net if you have any questions or concerns.
